About the Institute

Once again, we are taking our School Law Institute virtual for 2021 using Zoom, a cloud-based video-conferencing service. The Institute program has been designed with busy educators in mind. Taught by Drummond Woodsum school attorneys who have years of experience both practicing and teaching school law, the Institute distills from the vast body of education statutes and court decisions the knowledge that educators most need to perform their jobs effectively and to recognize and prevent legal problems before they arise.

The institute involves significant reading in advance from Maine School Law, as well as collected court and arbitration rulings. Participants will complete a written exercise in advance of the course, participate in a virtual mock exercise during the course, prepare and present a short oral argument related to one side of an assigned case, and submit a 5 page paper at the conclusion of the course.

The Institute is an intense and exciting learning experience for educators, so we encourage participants to be fully present during their online sessions. Because of the small class size and casual nature of the Institute, instructors Elek Miller and Isabel Ekman will be available to continue discussions and talk informally with participants throughout the 7-days of classes.

Topics Include:

- Legal Framework of the Public Schools in Maine
- Student Rights (the First and Fourth Amendments, Title IX, due process, and more)
- Special Education
- Employment
- Collective Bargaining
- Litigation and Liability
- Religion in Schools
- School Finance

The course will also qualify for C.E.U.s from UMO for a small fee. Instructions for payment will be provided with the course materials.

About Your Instructors

Elek Miller is a general school lawyer who works with schools on all manner of legal issues. He advises and represents schools in front of state and federal courts and administrative agencies regarding student discipline and student rights; privacy and technology matters; copyright and trademark disputes, the employment of teachers, school administrators, and other employees; and a number of other subjects. He also counsels schools about compliance with state and federal laws and regulations as well as the implications of efforts to generate alternative revenue streams such as merchandising school apparel and facilities naming rights; and assists schools by conducting personnel and student-related investigations. He is the head of Drummond Woodsum's privacy and data security practice group, and for a number of years he was an adjunct professor at the University of Southern Maine, teaching a course on school law for future school administrators. He is also a co-author of Maine School Law (6th edition 2018).

Isabel Ekman represents schools on all aspects of school and education law, including special education and disability rights, student discipline, student rights, employment disputes, and investigations. Isabel represents school districts in administrative hearings and complaints before the Maine Department of Education, as well as in discrimination, harassment, and retaliation cases before the Maine Human Rights Commission and state and federal courts. Isabel has served as an instructor for school law courses offered by the University of Southern Maine, as well as for the Institute.
